STRUCTURE D'ACCUEIL

ESPCI Paris - PSL (École Supérieure de Physique et de Chimie Industrielles de la Ville de Paris) is a general engineering school that has been training, since 1882, high-level engineers with a solid theoretical and experimental background. It is part of an internationally recognized research center in physics, chemistry and biology (500 publications per year). It is known for its ability to transform knowledge from fundamental research into breakthrough innovations (2 patents per month, 3 start-ups per year).

It has been awarded 6 Nobel Prizes (including the 2 obtained by Marie Curie) and hosts 400 students, 530 researchers (including 250 PhD students and 100 post-doctoral fellows) in 10 joint research units and about 100 research and teaching support staff.

Since its creation, the ESPCI has never ceased to mobilize its strengths and competencies in the service of major societal issues and to defend the importance of science in the service of society. The environment, solidarity, health, access and openness to knowledge are issues that the ESPCI is committed to considering in its daily work while contributing to their advancement. The ESPCI defends equal opportunities and promotes social diversity. It encourages and values the commitment of its students, particularly in the form of associations. ESPCI also fosters an entrepreneurial culture combined with innovation favoring the creation of start-ups and the filing of patents.
